TRAIN TOWN

ALL KINDS OF WEATHER!
SUNNY, STORMY, SNOWING, RAINY, DAY & NIGHT!

Train Town is a nice experience. The game is very colorful and has fair graphics. It's not as much space as I was hoping for to build a world but it is enough to build a small city. You can blow the trains up once you get bored of watching them. The music is personally my favorite part. It is very cheerful and uplifting.. My 4 year old son loves this game! A fun train sandbox game for Kids! I'd say ages 4 to 7, but even as a parent I have fun tinkering around with it.

Catchy music, fun sandbox style. There are multiple train styles from Steam to Sesiel to super fast rocket trains.

You can run trains on pre-made tracks, or build your own from scratch! It's super easy to move the tracks around and make your own layout. You can add buildings, trees, and objects too.

YES, you can also CRASH your trains too!

. I f*cking love this game. It reminds me when I was homeless (still am) when I was vagabonding on trains with my tweeker buddies. 10\/10. Hi, my litte brother is enjoying this game greatly, here is his gratitude to the auther by a cute message:

it is great and i like blowing up the trains

It's a shame there ismany negitive reviews.. You can simulate 9\/11, but with trains.

Also this game made my \u0430ss feel strange.

I rate it 8\/8 m8. it gave me cancer and gave me a life. needs more orange i rate it 9\/11. It's a virtual train set.

I like trains. I liked the concept and the graphics.

I didn't like the controls for placing track or other objects.. Really disappointing. There are no switches, bridges, tunnels, stations. You can put many curves in your single closed loop of track if you are very very patient, but that's it.

I had hoped that my preschooler could be more actively in control of this than when we play Sid Meier's Railroads together, but I'm not even going to show it to him because he'd find it so boring.

. Good for young children\/early elementary school.. Good game for young kids.

All aboard! Bought this for my 4 year old. He had a great time, we'll play more I'm sure.

You build train tracks, put down buildings, rocks, trees, people, and more. Lots of objects to choose from so you can be creative. The building controls are dead simple. Just a few menus that let you place objects, change their size and rotation, change the weather, all basic stuff that works well.

Then you choose a train and drive it around the track. When the train hits anything it explodes, so there is lots of fun to be had creating some big destruction. The train controls are almost nonexistent - just pick your train and it starts to move, all you can do is change the speed. But that's enough, it's not as much of a game as it is a playset.

You can download tracks that others have made, and that's a good way to get into some instant action. You can share your tracks too.

The visuals are nice. Bright and colourful, music and sound aren't annoying. All in all a nice package. For $3, totally worth it if you have a kiddo who likes trains.. I'd urge you not to buy this game. Whatever your expectation, you really won't get anything from it.

It's like a baby simulation that doesnt really have any physical rules. There's really nothing to the game but an open (tiny) sandbox and an ability to lay a track and scenery items. The problem is there's no real logic to any of this, it's just about randomly plopping junk onto a small screen, and then .... watching in boredom.

I have three sons, aged almost 2, 3.5 and 5.5 .. and they all were bored to tears by this non-game.

It was clearly a dodgy little iPhone game, and they thought "maybe we can make some $$$ launching this on Steam". When porting for the PC, the developer didn't even bother to update basic text .. the controls all say "touch this", or "swipe your finger to the left".

I wouldn't ordinarily write a review unless a game were truly superb or utterly utterly crap.

.... save your money, if you want a nice learning train game for kids you can get Sid Meiers RAILROADS, or a bunch of simulators out there, some real world, some kiddy oriented.

But this game is awful, a total fraud, ripoff, DO NOT BUY.. Great Train game :D. I'm not real sure what I expected. Even at 67% off, this game isn't worth $1.

Update: The game sits in the category "Regrets" in my library - also worth noting, it is the only game in that category.. The game is boring after 12 minutes all you do is ram trains into other trains and run over random houses not my idea of a fun time.. why the ♥♥♥♥ are you looking at train town reviews?

(this is the best game i've ever played in my life). Train Town is fun to play with a kid. I build the tracks with my nephew and he likes to crash the trains. big fun! there are diffent types of trains to pick from. theres steam trains to rocket trains. its not one i would play but its a blast to play with a child to see them laugh.. Games fun kinda a "baby's first train sim" game if you have never played one before buy this its fun easy and helps you every step of the way
